Bag Boy's New T-2000 Travel Cover Features Patent Pending Pivot Grip™ Handle Designed to Reduce Arm and Wrist Strain While Transporting Clubs

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 7, 2011- Bag Boy, a company known for engineering and designing innovative push carts, golf bags and travel covers, has taken the technology from its popular Revolver series of golf bags and developed a revolutionary travel cover. The T-2000 travel cover features a patent pending Pivot Grip™ handle that rotates 360 degrees which reduces arm and wrist strain while transporting clubs.

"Our R&D team has done an outstanding job in taking advanced technology from our golf bag line and applying it to the T-2000 travel cover," said Craig Ramsbottom, President, Dynamic Brands Golf Division. "Our testing shows that the Pivot Grip™ reduces strain on the arm and wrist by 100% percent from travel covers with traditional handles. Golfers will see and feel the difference immediately when they travel with the T-2000."

The ergonomic pivot grip is built into the top of the T-2000. The handle rotates 360 degrees to make changing directions simple, never having to let go of the travel bag. The T-2000 is made of durable 1680D nylon and features an ultra-thick wrap-around padded top, sturdy PVC back with an extended ABS base for maximum club protection, two oversized garment pockets and a shoe pocket. The deluxe in-line skate wheels provide the traveler smooth and quiet rolling action. The travel cover fits a 48-inch driver and up to a 10-inch cart bag.

Additional features of the T-2000 travel cover include dual lift handles, a lockable, full wrap-around main zipper which simplifies access and packing, durable padded carry handles and an internal compression strap to stabilize the bag during travel.

The T-2000 will be available mid-December in three colors – red/black, silver/black, royal/black. The suggested retail is $189.95 (U.S.) and includes a one-year warranty.
